

The Contributors

Solomon Benjamin is a Consultant and Reseacher based in Bangalore. He has a doctorate in urban studies. He works on issues of urban poverty, governance, land management, and local economic development. He has worked in several international research projects, has published widely, has lectured in the US and UK and is a visiting faculty at the National Law School in Bangalore.

Pradeep Bhargava is a Senior Fellow at the Institute of Development Studies, Jaipur. He has 20 years' experience of applied research and policy advice in poverty management. His areas of specialisation include poverty, non-farm sector, primary and non-formal education, child labour monitoring and evaluation of poverty reduction. He is a member of the CHIP India team.

Shashanka Bhide is presently Professor and Head of the RBI Unit at the Institute for Social & Economic Change, Bangalore. He was head of the Macroeconomics Programme Area at National Council of Applied Economic Research, New Delhi until January 2003. His major areas of work include agriculture, macroeconomic modelling and development economics. He is a core team member of the Chronic Poverty Research Centre in India.

Kate Bird is an Economist at the Overseas Development Institute in London where she works as a Research Fellow in the Poverty and Public Policy Group. Her work focuses on policy-relevant research on poverty, livelihoods and vulnerability, generally in rural areas. She leads the Chronic Poverty Research Centre's work on remote rural areas.

Deepa Chatterjee is a Research Officer at the Chronic Poverty Research Centre, India at IIPA. She has been working on the CPRC project for more than a year and a half. She has previously worked with other research organisations like the NCAER. Her other areas of interest include public finance and demand forecasting of industrial products.

Sourabh Ghosh has just joined the Chronic Poverty Research Centre, India at IIPA as a Research Officer. He has submitted his M.Phil dissertation on Migration at the State level in India, to the Centre for the Study of Regional Development (C.S.R.D.) at JNU.

David Hulme is Professor Of Development Studies at the University of Manchester and Director of the Chronic Poverty Research Centre. His interests in poverty reduction emerged out of early work on rural development. He has researched in Bangladesh, India, Sri Lanka and other countries.

Anand Kumar is Professor of Sociology at JNU with special interest in dynamics of development and globalisation. He has been a faculty member at BHU (Varanasi), Albert Ludwig University (Freiburg) and MSH (Paris). His publications include State and Society in India, Nationbuilding in India and Tibet: A Sourcebook. He is a core team member of the Chronic Poverty Research Centre in India.

Kanchan Mathur is a Fellow at the Institute of Development Studies, Jaipur where she heads the Women's/Gender Studies Group. She is a development researcher with teaching and consulting experience in the field of gender and development. She has published in many national and international journals on gender and development issues, social relations and child labour. She is the lead researcher for Childhood Poverty Research and Policy Center (CHIP) in India.

Aasha Kapur Mehta is Professor of Economics at the Indian Institute of Public Administration, New Delhi and leads the Chronic Poverty Research Centre's work in India. She has been a Fulbright scholar and a McNamara fellow. Her area of research is now entirely focused on poverty reduction and equity related issues.

Nikhila Menon worked as a Research Officer, Chronic Poverty Research Centre, India during Phase 1 and the first year of Phase 2.

She is now on a tenured position at Institute of Applied Manpower Research.

Karen Moore is the CPRC Research Associate, based at the Institute for Development Policy and Management, University of Manchester. Her current research interests include the intersections between childhood and intergenerational poverty; economic socialisation; and gender, particularly in urban South Asia.

Shobhita Rajagopal is an Associate Fellow at the Institute of Development Studies, Jaipur and has been researching in the areas of gender and primary education, poverty mainstreaming and gender concerns in policy planning and implementation. She is a part of the India CHIP research team. She has also been extensively involved in gender training of development planners, practitioners and NGO's both at the national and State level.

P.L. Sanjeev Reddy, I.A.S. (Retd.) is Director, IIPA. He has held several important positions in the Government of India, including Special Assistant to the President of India, Secretary, Department of Company Affairs, Secretary, Department of Rural Development, Secretary, Department of Rural Employment and Poverty Alleviation and Principal Adviser, Planning Commission. He has also worked as Director General, Indian Institute of Foreign Trade, Director General of Foreign Trade, Ministry of Commerce and Principal Secretary to the Chief Minister of Andhra Pradesh. He has a doctorate in Industrial Management and a Post Graduate Diploma in Development Studies from the University of Cambridge.

D.C. Sah is Professor at Madhya Pradesh Institute of Social Science Research, Ujjain. His research interests have focused on economic and sociological aspects of equity and ecology in sustainable common resource management, decentralised governance and second-generation impoverishment risks in development displacement. He has published three books and also several articles in academic journals. His recent publication is on Involuntary Migration of Sardar Sarovar oustees.

Amita Shah, an economist, is a Professor at Gujarat Institute of Development Research, Ahmedabad. Her major research interests are natural resources management and sustainable livelihood. She has undertaken several studies on environment-development interface focusing on migration, participatory watershed development and protected area management. She is a core team member of the Chronic Poverty Research Centre in India.

Andrew Shepherd is Group Co-ordinator, Rural Policy and Environment Group, Overseas Development Institute, London and Deputy Director, Chronic Poverty Research Centre. He was previously Senior Lecturer, University of Birmingham. His main research interests are poverty analysis and poverty reduction policies.